★ Montague Fishing Rods ★

Made of Finest Split Bamboo for Fresh and Salt Water

Pioneer makers of split bamboo fishing rods in this country, the Montague Rod & Reel Company offers you the skill and experience of their rod craftsmen — men who have worked all their lives making fishing rods, and whose fathers often worked at the same bench before them.

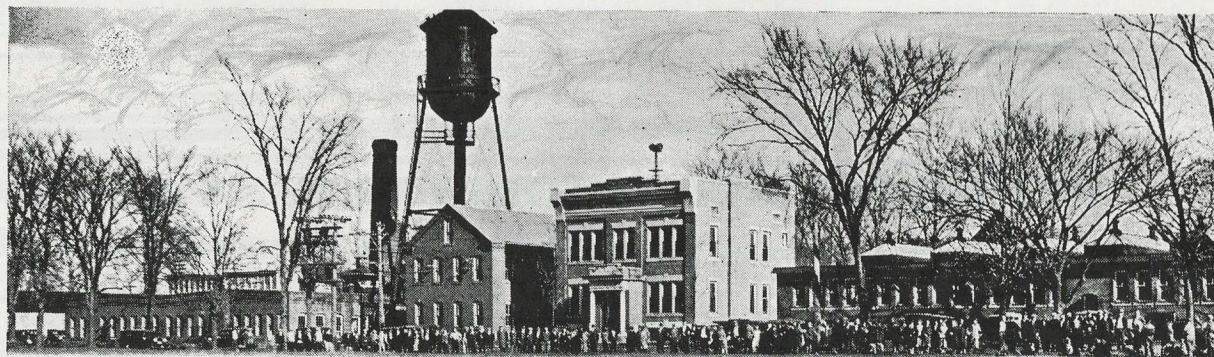

Did you know that no less than 21 different pairs of skilled hands work on each Montague fishing rod?

One other important factor is the bamboo itself. Montague, a leading buyer of each year's crop, gets the best bamboo on the market — a species called Tonkin Cane specially cultivated in the hills above Canton, China. Even before it reaches the Montague factory, Montague standards of quality control its harvesting and seasoning.

Remember that an ordinary three joint, six-strip fly rod contains eighteen separate strips of split-bamboo. Each strip is heat treated and "tempered" to give it stamina and backbone.

Dollar for dollar — you get more for your money when you buy a Montague rod. When you inspect a Montague rod in your dealer's store, you can rest assured that it has already been inspected more critically in Montague's plant than if you picked a grand jury of rod experts.

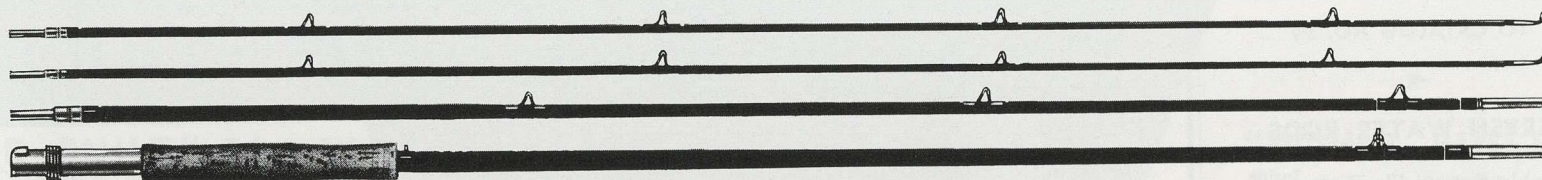

Price — in fishing rods — is a pretty fair indication of quality. The higher priced rods have better materials, more refinements of construction — things that give more backbone and stamina to your rod. Remember that the better the rod the better it will work for you.

Consult your local Montague dealer for assistance in making your selection. He probably has a good knowledge of local conditions and will be able to help you in choosing the right rod for your greatest enjoyment.

Some Thoughts on Choosing Your Rod

The great range of fishing rods shown in this catalog under the different classifications is, we must admit, rather confusing. We would like to have it more simple.

The reason for so many rods is that nearly every part of North America has developed a liking for a particular style of rod to catch its particular kind of fish. One group of fishermen may prefer this type of guide, or that style of reel seat. It is our job to provide every fisherman so far as possible with what he needs and wants in his fishing grounds.

To the novice buying a rod, we can offer no sounder advice than that you consult your local Montague dealer. He will know the preference of fishermen in your locality for style of equipment.

And we hope you will remember that split bamboo is the finest material available in the world today for making fishing rods . . . and Montague is the world's largest maker of split bamboo rods.

"Big Game Treble"

If it's big fish you're after, here's the huskiest, toughest, thoroughbred rod you could ask for—every detail designed to help you land the big ones. The "Big Game Treble" is triple-built—that means three separate layers of split bamboo (18 strips in all) built one over the other. Has a 20-oz. one-piece tip of specially selected split bamboo, 61 inches long. Butt is 21 inches long, of hand turned hickory with a slotted butt cap. Extra long heavy, nickel silver  $1\frac{1}{8}$  inch scrulock doweled waterproof reel seat with double hexagon nuts. Cork and rubber composition forward grip. Tip is closely wound with extra heavy silk and has six coats of varnish. Equipped with five bridge guides specially designed for big game fishing. These guides are absolutely non-fouling and are very strongly constructed, with chromium plated stainless steel ring. The "Big Game Treble" has a roller top of stainless steel chrome plate. Packed in a heavy canvas bag.

"BIG GAME DOUBLE" . . . $65.00

Same as Treble except double-built.

"BIG GAME SINGLE" . . . $50.00

Same as Treble except single-built and has stainless steel guarded top.

Showing how "double-built" rods are made with an inner and outer layer of finest selected six-strip bamboo—twelve pieces in all. Carefully machined and joined to give maximum strength and performance.

A GOOD ROD DESERVES GOOD CARE!

Ordinarily, Split Bamboo Fishing Rods require only the usual care which good equipment is entitled to.

After hard service and exposure, it is only natural that the rod's varnish should be renewed. This should be done every two or three years. It is best not to let it go too long. A good even coat of tough varnish protects the silk windings and the cane from weather and ordinary wear and tear.

After a fishing season, put your rod away in a cabinet or closet where it will not be exposed to too much heat. If this is neglected, a rod kept in a warm room through the winter may be damaged by drying out . . . especially if near a radiator.

In the spring, when getting ready for fishing, test all ferrules, and the reel seat if of metal, to make sure they are tight. A loosened ferrule generally can be tightened by heating it by holding over a burning match, there generally being sufficient cement in the ferrule.

Before using a rod, examine it critically. Note if any silk windings are frayed or broken, any guides bent or loose, any ferrules loose or bent. Pay particular attention to guides to see if worn. Worn steel or agate guides, that are developing sharp edges, are expensive for the lines they wear out, and should be replaced. A broken or fractured joint generally requires expert attention. Such repairs usually are best made at the factory.

Never put your Split Bamboo Rod away in a damp or wet cloth case, even if you know you will use it the next day. Especially never put a wet rod away in an aluminum case. Dampness breeds mildew, and if in an air-tight container as suggested, mildew may ruin a good rod by attacking the glue.

If carried in a soft cloth cover, do not tie joints of the rod together too snugly, as this may bend them out of shape and cause a warp.

Always keep the centers of ferrules smooth, so they will function properly. Rubbing in one's hair usually supplies sufficient oil. Should a ferrule center become corroded during the winter, from some neglect, in removing the corrosion, be very careful that you do not reduce the size of the center so as to make it loose when the rod is set up.

AND A GOOD REEL DOES, TOO!

A reel is a piece of machinery and as such deserves a certain amount of care if it is to be expected to give good service over a period of many years.

Montague Reels are strong and sturdy and, if kept properly lubricated, should rarely (if ever) need to be repaired. In case of your reel becoming bent or broken in any accident, however, do not try to fix it yourself unless you are an expert. It is better to take it back to your dealer who will, if necessary, send it to the factory.

Oiling and cleaning are the two important jobs to be done regularly in caring for your reel. A reel, being cast, turns at 1500 to 3000 R.P.M. To avoid friction and wear at such speeds, all moving parts must be clean and well-oiled. In salt water use, also, the oil and grease is needed to combat corrosion.

Nearly all salt water reels can be greased from the outside, having two oiling places on the right side plate and one on the left plate. Insert nozzle of oil can or grease tube in holes and apply a small amount. Be sure to slide the cover back over the hole after oiling. "Reelslick" will be found an ideal lubricant.

On reels without the outside oiling feature, remove the spindle caps and handle nut, then place a drop of oil in each bushing and under the gear shaft set screw. Replace the right cap first, then adjust left cap with its tension spring so the play in the spool is right. On take-apart reels, loosen thumb screw, remove side plate, oil and replace.

Reels should be oiled after each day's use. Salt water reels should be thoroughly cleaned at least once a season, taking reel apart, washing with gasoline or kerosene, and oiling all moving parts.

EVERY MONTAGUE ROD AND REEL IS GUARANTEED AGAINST DEFECTS IN MATERIALS AND WORKMANSHIP
